This new launch comes after Ultraviolette launched Tesseract electric scooter (starting at ₹1.45 lakh) and the Shockwave light electric motorcycle (starting at ₹1.75 lakh).

Ultraviolette X-47 has introduced an advanced dash-cam camera and a 77-GHz long-range rear radar, which is capable of monitoring a range up to 200 m with core functions like blind-spot awareness, lane-change assist, overtake alert, rear-collision warning and so on.

The X-47 is powered by a 40 hp (30 kW) motor and offers a claimed range of 323 km on a single charge.

Narayan Subramaniam, CEO and Co-founder of Ultraviolette, commented: "At Ultraviolette, innovation defines everything we do, and with the X-47 Crossover, we have built a motorcycle from the ground up to transform the entire riding experience."

EXPANSION PLANS

Ultraviolette currently operates in 30 cities across India and has showcased its portfolio in 10 European countries. With EV adoption gaining pace, the company plans to expand its network to 100 cities as part of its aggressive growth strategy.
